

PRESS RELEASE

R. J. Buckley Publishing

San Tan Valley, AZ

February 1, 2012

ANNOUNCING the book release of NEON RAINBO by E. Don Harpe!

(to read the story description on the cover, please download and enlarge)

NOW AVAILABLE THROUGH AMAZON.COM AND THE PUBLISHER - $19

Also available in ebook format through Kindle and through Smashwords.com for all other digital reader devices - $5.99. Within two to four weeks you may also order through other Internet bookstores as well as your favorite chain or neighborhood booksellers.

Some say there is a very thin line between love and hate, between sanity and madness, and Morgan Nichols believed it. He knew for sure that trying to stay on that thin line in his size ten cowboy boots was a hell of a chore. And underneath it all Morgan Nichols was nothing more than an ordinary man, lured by the Lorelei call of Nashville every bit as much as the thousands of others that came each year.

Morgan was caught up by the music, immersed in the heavy atmosphere at the bottom and craving the thin, heady air that waited at the top. He was drowning in the deep, hypnotic patterns of the rhythm, knowing that his heart beat in time to the never-ending guitars and twin fiddles that played in his head.

But Morgan knew something that most of the others hadn't learned yet. The neon rainbow was real, and Morgan had been chasing its glimmer for years, always a day late and a dollar short. But that was about to change.

Same as his protagonist in Neon Rainbow, E. Don Harpe has lived the high and lows of Nashville music most of his life. Now he and his wife Helen reside in rural Georgia in the foothills of the Great Smoky Mountains. In his 2007 memoir - The Last Of The South Town Rinky Dinks - Harpe included a chapter that told of his lifelong love of country music, a chapter that inspired him to work on a story he had begun years ago and NEON RAINBO is the result. A prolific short story writer, Harpe is also a songwriter. Many of his songs have been recorded.

WEB SITE: www.donharpe.com

RJB Contact Information

R. J. Buckley rjbuckleypublish@aol.com www.rjbuckleypublishing.com